Mon, 21 May 2018 20:55:00 GMT - A condition can be either necessary or sufficient without being the other. For instance, being a mammal (N) is necessary but not sufficient to being human (S), and that a number is rational (S) is sufficient but not necessary to being a real number (N) (since there are real numbers that are not rational). A condition can be both necessary and sufficient.
